

Number of architecture firms in the U.S.: 20,602

Your ideal firm has between 30-50 employees, does mostly residential work, all over the country. It's located in the northeast, preferably Boston, because you know people there. The office environment is definitely laid back, but it also has to feel young, energetic and restless. You'll have a lot of contact with senior staff... how else can you learn, right? Oh, and you don't mind doing construction documents, but if you have to spend all day in a cube, you'll just cry.

File a Firm Report

and instantly see how your firm scores in 10 key areas including Professional Development, Employee Caliber, Design Quality, Management Skill, Attitude Toward Interns, and Compensation. Are you getting the quality learning experience you deserve?

Number of firms perfect for you: 8

Browse Firm Reports

of other firms to find out what you're missing and target firms for your next employment opportunity.

The majority of architecture firms are small firms. They don't receive a lot of press and may not have a web site. When deciding where to send a resume, how do we narrow the field of thousands of firms to those whose work will interest us, those who provide a valuable learning environment, and those where our contribution will be most respected?

InsideArch was founded, and is operated by intern architects.

We believe that providing interns and architects at all levels with information about a firm's work and its culture will serve to improve the efficiency of the market for architectural talent, matching employers with better employees, and interns and architects with better opportunities.